Washisoron, June 18.—The tariff bill came to a balt in the senate today, less then one page of the flax schedule being disposed of. The debate drilled into ples of the article, produced a Minnesota, Michigan and the Dakotas.

Mr. Pettigrew declared that the proposed rates ought to be doubled, as an encouragement to the flourishing has industry of the northwests. He derided the regult of placing a dety on raw cotton. Southern sensors had done this keep out Egyptian cotton, and yet hee New England manufacturer had been given a componentory duly to bring in Egyptian cotton. So that, deniand the sensor, all that was accomplished was to help eastern Republicans break up the solid south.

This brought a response from Mr. Bacon of Soveria, who took the lead in the contest for a duty on raw cotton, life did not believe the cotton manufacturers abould receive compensatory duty to offset the duty on raw cotton, as the manufacturer already had ample protection. There was figurant discrimination, he said, between the raw produce of the farmers of the south being taxed, while the bunding twine need by the

CREDIT TO WHOM IT IS DUE.

The Expositor comes with flaming eye and corrugated brow to the defense of A. B. Batlor, who is described by its special Washington correspondent as the person to whom "credit is mainly having accured the adoption by due" for naving secure of the Dingley the United States senate of the Dingley bill duties on raleins and Zants cur-rants. It seems to feel that both the s, it seems to rest that both the situs and Mr. Butler were at the time viciously assailed when this very mildly suggested that Senried Irulta. HAWAIIAN ANNEXATION.

There is reason to suppose that the treaty providing for the ameration of the Hawaiian islands by the United States will be promptly rathed by the Goral cenate. A canvase of the seemals by the San Francisco Examiner leads to the presumption that the vote in lavor of the treaty will be fer more than a treaty providing for the annexation of the Hawaiian islands by the United States will be promptly ratified by the federal renate. A canvass of the senate hy the San Francisco L.cominer leads to the presumption that the vote in favor of the treaty will be far more than a partisan vote; so far removed, indeed, that all appearance of partisanchip will be taken from it. It is a question of adthe islands will be a fruitful source of ction would involve a vast and necolding the territory of the United tates in a concrete mass.

To the latter argument; it is not nec-bost and wisest thing to do now. past it was neither expedient casary that we should reach out by our comparatively few inhabitants. the questions which seventy-five millions of people must answer necessarily are very different from those which a half a third of that number answered. or a third of that number answered. The policy of the past is not necessarily of importance to the men of today.

The other argument, however, is on its face more important. It is true that, having annexed the Hawailan islands. we must protect them, and it is equally true that such protection usunot be insured without large cost. But there is another thing which the opponents of the treaty do not appear to consider: With the islandr as a territory of the United States, it will be no more nacespary to guard our interests there against foreign interference than it always has been. There never has been a time when this nation could with indifference have seen the islands pass under alien power. Nature had esserted that they should be our Pacific outpost, and we could not disregard her fat. If we care etill to pursue our past negative policy of mayal weakness, there is nothing to hinder our pursuing it whether or not the falands are ones, and the pricellthat we might pay for the policy would be precisely the same in any event. In brief, we must protect the islands, anyway. Why not protect our own?

These blands are a species of natural Paradise, and some Americane might take prids in the thought that such Edenic spots are a part of their country. This, however, is a matter of email moment in comparison with the fact that we need them for a Pecific mayal estation. That is a fact which in-sirte upon being weighed. As for Lill-nokelant's wail, it is of the kind that this country to give his land to the The law of evolution will prevail.

THE NEW MANUAL.

Change of Drilling Regulations in the National Guard.

The two local military companies have received orders to adopt the new manual of drilling regulations. This system contains several changes from the old cantains several ensages from the old man, as it is adapted to drilling with the Krag-Joygoneon rifle, with which the repular ramy is now equipped. Within it is likely that the militia will retain thair Springfield muskets for a number of years yet, they are to learn how to inside the mow rifle so that in ease of active service under the United Status government, when they would be might be supplied with the imported finearm, they can act in uniformity with the regulars. In the new manual the order of "carry arms" is climinated because of its impracticability with the Krag-Jorgoneon rifle. "Carry serms" has been a part of the milliery movements from time immemerial, and the change are the port and the order.

An Heir Here, Too.

It is said that Fresno will present a claimant to part of the famous Barney Barnato's estate. The heir, according to report, is no other than Paul R. Ruben, one of Fresno's most popular citizens. It is not know what relationship existed between Mr. Rubes and Barnato, but it is certain that Paul was not Harney's father. Should the report turn out to be founded on fact, it is hoped Mr. Rubes will not inrust his triends. Barnato resembled Mr. Rubes very much, by the way. It is said that W. J. Dickey and Dan Brown else claim relationship to Barnato, buttheir friends are langiling them to score. It is said that Freano will present a

MAXWELL'S MISSION.

Young Maxwell stood by his impatient herse, one foot in the stirrup, in front of the communitieg officer's tent. His checks were fushed and his eyes show with the light of gratified pride.

"I have chosen you," said the officer, "In more thanks you."
"In more thanks you was a more only to-cause of the spead of your borse and your own activity and zeal, but because of the character you have gained while in the service of the company. It is not overy man of the pioneers I would trust 200 severeigns in gold. And look here, young man—Parrel's death by fover left a vacancy among the sergeants. I'll say no more, except that in the commany a sergeant always stands a chance of becoming a licational. I trust you, Maxwell. You understand your orders?"

"Gross two rivers going due north, then head for a big knople which i will see from the bank of the second river. There I shall find blentmant Addir's camp, get a receipt and return."

"Exactly. You will get there shortly after nightfall. Remember, you will trust. "in spite of your youth, not only be-

The youngest treoper of that audicious band, who, in insignificant numbers, marched a few years ago right into the country of the most dreaded Raffir king in South Africa, the ferceions ıla, rada off on his mission will Lobengula, rado off on his mission williaglad and proud heart. This was his chance, but he felt he had earned it, and as his horse bounded through the long grass and brensted the waters of the rivem Maxwell's imagination was picturing a glorious future of which that day should be the beginning. There was some indeed for dreams, gozding in that rich and measureless vehic, which could futten councless herds, which would yield inadentable stores of grain, whose river heds were another Giver Who shall read the dreams of youth?

So firedly speal his horse that the measurement and crossed the first river and was in sight of the second, beyond which he could already see the keppin or hill, which was his destination before the sun quite disappeared on the western rim of the welfs. It was, however, darkening, and the keppic was merging swiftly into the gray shadows of evening, when suddenly from the tall grass to his right came a land call. It was not the neutroness of the write, though that was startlingly close, that brought Marwell to nether halt. It was the fact that it was a civilized voice, as distinctly discernible from a Kaffe org as could be, and a voice also that seemed in distress.

"Wacht can beetjet" (Waita little). It was the cry of a Dutchman, a floer, and it amozed the courier so that he reined in his horse. What, he thought, could a fleer be doing alone in that will land, hundreds of miles from his Transvan settlement? At any rate, if he medded help—

"Wacht een heetjet" came the call again, but sharply, commandingly. From the grass, high as a men's head, came a danser shadow than of any feeting cloud and the heat of a horse's hoofs. Maxwell, in the dust, save only heav again on this set a rider swiftly approaching. Suddenly something gleamed in a parting ray of the sam, and the pioneer realized that a long rife was pointing at him. At the same instant he pressed his kneet to his horse's flanks, and the brate planged forward—too late! The courier's attention had been so concentrated on hisright that he had not noticed another appartition stealing upon him from the left. As the lurse started forward a strong arm dutched started forward a strong arm clutched the rains and forced it back, while authe reins and forced it back, while an-other, wielding a knobkerrie, struck Maxwell from his horse.

Without a word the two strangers keped from their horses, and, bending ever the bady, rifled it of its money ielt, containing the golden burden. Not until that was done did they speak, and, although the first man had culled to the messenger in Dutch and with a Boar's accent, now they spoke in Eng-

"Say no more, major," he said abroptly. "Maxwell, I regret this occurrence very much. Mach as I hate to say it, the major argues correctly. It is impossible to credit this wild tale of liners being around here. The matter must, however, pass out of our hands. Tomorrow Sergeant Whyne goes to Kimberley on company's business, and Private Roberts with him. They will take you as far as Fort Tull, on the frontier, under arrest, awaiting trink."

It was with very different sensations from those will which he had ridden off on his mission that Marwell commenced his journey to Tuli. Yet, though a prisoner, and his heart filled with a damb despair, he held his head proudly as he shock hands with a few comrudes who hade him cheer up. But the efforts of his friends to give him hope were for the greater part forced, for Maxwell could not but see with bitterness that even they found it hard to credit his story. It was preposturous to believe that any other white men were in that hestile country save the phoneers them-solves. His checks flushed as he overhead the remark of one:

"I'm sorry for him, for he was a first rate sort, but he ought to have done it.

"I'm sorry for him, for he was a first rate sort, but he ought to have done it mader than that. Anyhow they can't do anything to him. They can't prove he took the money, but they can't prave he did not, don't yea know."

"So," thought Maxwell with auguish, "I shall be a suspected man all my life."

"I shall be a suspected man all my life."
The prisoner and his two guards rode on almost in silence. The journey to Tall, on the frontier, would take them at the least three days, and it was not one without danger. They did not fear my intercuption from the Matabele warriors, for these were massed to the north with their king, but lions and large game abounded, and the broad rivers over which they had to swim their horses swarmed with encouldes. To defend himself, therefore, Maxwell's rifle and cartridges, although he was under arrest, were not taken from him. He knew his guards but slightly. They were not men of the kind he had chosen to be infinate with; of the ruder, least educated class in that mixed company of adventurous young fellows.

Sergeant Waym first broke the dreary silence.

"We're as gloomy and silent as if we were all going to be lung," he cried, with a loud laugh. "Cherr up, Max!

The ruse succeeded. The two twopers came leisurely down from the camp, Maxwell planeed auxicustly at them, and his eyes it up triumphantly. For they were unarmed. They had left their guiss and histos and betts by the fire.

"There will be a flight for the letters, you think?" I said.

"Yes, probably. Guitine has something of a vogue just now. The women are discovering that he wrote as in their best home they think. And indeed it was a tender, womanly muse. The little man standing by the table—him with the glasses, I mean—will, I think, get them. He is a professor at the university, and doubless mediates an article in one of the reviews. I was scatted on the versuals of the house in which I bearded. It was quite linte—yes, I remember hearing the tower clock strike 11. There is nothing in the world that will except a man's attention when scaled above in the dark like meditation. Suffice it to say that I was thinking.

How long I would have sat there I do not know. But as I happened to glauce at the sky I noticed a faint light far off coming toward me. At first it was othing but a specific delting the heavens, but as it approughed it grew momentarily larger. Beyindered, I watched it come on, and, as it got within 200 feet of my. A thought struck me. I could descend and see wind had become of her. Springing to the side of the basket, I adhed the lever, but it failed to respond. Again and again did I pull, but it was uccless.

Frantically I pressed a large button the inflated part of the balloon—a rung that guidally became deafening. Slowly the balloon started to sink, gradually gaining speed as it descended. It now shot so rupilly that certain destruction scened to await me below.

Crossing to the other side, I peared below. Heavens, the housetops could now be plainly distinguished in the safe gray light of dawn! One house stood up bolily above the others. It was the louis in which I lived, and if the hallon could not it.

on that July evening in 18—, when the mail train was swiftly carrying me from Liverpeal to Lemion.

I was young, my prospects were good, my hushess feer-shing, and I was engaged to the ard of my heart—profly Betty Dawep at Her mane, by the way, was kine and in compliment to a weeling galmenter—a dreadful combination, which its owner indigmantly repaddated. Mr. Davenpote was an engineer and had lately returned from South America. Betty had the reputation of being a bit of a first, and there was a certain merchant at Buenos Ayres, James Andrews by mane, whom her bright cres and cleur complexion had entirely vanquished. My sweetheart always looked serious when the merchant's mane was mentioned. Poor fellow! On his side, at least, it was no idle fürtation. Since the fair English girl refused him be had neglected his business and was on the highward to ruin.

Curiously enengh, I had been mixed ap with his affairs in a strange way. Though we had never met, we knew each other by name and repute, and as we were both in the wool trade I had he unconscious means of discover big swindle, which he, as a las to resource, bad planned to say him from bankruptcy. The attempt failed—he was rained. And by a strange irony of fate the man who had won the girl he had woodd was instrumental in girl he had wood was instrumental in accelerating that ruin.

So my thoughts ran as the train thundered through the black night.

At Rugby another passenger got into my compartment, of which bitherto I had been sole eccapier. I had read the exching paper down to the advertisements and had recad Berty's last letter, so the pre-piet of a chat was a welcome one. The newcomer seemed as much inclined for conversation as I was, and we were seen chafting sway much inclined for conversation as I was, and we were soon chaffing away on the thousand and one topics in which man of the world are interested. A chance classion of mine to South Africa chance anisation of many to a spent som elicited the fact that he had spent som years of his life there, and this forme

About 5 o'clock on Thursday the door my sitting room was thrown open, and Betty, thickly veiled, ran in. Poor little girlt When I had bidder farewell knows when a six shoater may not be beseeful. Would you let me see your?"

It was an unusual request, and for the moment rather staggered me. And his he bent forward I noticed that his face was working curiously and his outstrethed hands had trembled.

The train slackened speed. We were stoming at a function.

The train stackened speed. We were stepping at a function.

The porter came along the platform with his monotonous chant, "Change here for Cleshum." He put his head in our carriage. "Either of you gentlemen for Cheshun?" No, we were both bound for London, so the man took himself off. But he looked rather startled, and off. But he looked rather startice, and well he might. By the light of the lan-tern he carried he had seen two men, one bent forward, pale and eager, the other helding a pistub. I handed the strunger my pistol for inspection. It was a dainty thing. I

I handed the stranger my pistol for inspection. It was a dainty thing. I was rather proud of it. My mate in South Africa had given it me, and my name was engraved on it.

"Horace Bligh," read my fellow traveler. "So yon," with a steady flame in his preat veye, "are Horace Bligh?"

"That is my name," I replied, rather disconcerted. The man's manner was certainly strange. He toyed with the pistol in a dangerous way, and we were going at the rate of 50 infles an hour. It was not a pleasant position to be placed in. I began to recree my folly in combining with his request.

placed in. I began to recret my folly in complying with his request. I went on coolly: "Perhaps you had better return me my property. Pretty thing, is it not but baded and there-fore unreliable. You are handling it carelessly, and it might go off. I will be safer in my pecket." I reached out my hand in my turn, but my fellow traveler defity evaded no. I shall never forget the awful expression on his lang-end face.

So you are Horaco Bligh, Well, I "So you are Horace Bligh, Well, I am James Andrews, the man you have runed. Not only that, you have taken the girl I loved. I meant to kill myself if I had the chance. I have it mow. I have called the means of revenge, I could shoot you where you stand, but I will not. I reserve for you a more hideous faite. I will kill myself with your pistel, and in such a manner that suicide will appear improbable. On you will fall the ampicion—may, the certainty—of guilt."

down the window and thrust out my head. We were nearing the end of the fourney. Like flashes of lightning on thought after another rushed across my brain. He was dead—James Andrews, the man who had every reason to hear the condition. He was dead about through tra man who has cevery reason to seen country. He was dead, shut through the brain with my pistol. What more likely supposition could there be than that, in the heat of angur, of recrimination on his part, I had lost self control, fired at and killed him?

from the safe country. I had not sent country fired at and killed him?

Then ensued the most feeligh nettion of my life. I leaped from the new almost motionless train on to the platform and rain up the stairs into the street. I hailed a passing hausem and told the man to drive to my chambers in Furnival's inn. As he rattled through the quiet streets I congravulated myself can my escape from an unpleasant predictionent. It was unlikely that the porter would remember my face, and it he like three was not a very great chance of discovery. The pistol—good God—I fired my hand to my pooket. It was supty. In the burry of my impulsive flight I had left behind the cridene that would convict me. I had lorgotten that would convict me. I had forgotter

An Ancient Custom.

Eliakespeare, upon parting Brutus and Gassias prior to their tragife and on the plains of Philippi, did not sent them around a convivial tourd, where each might hespeak the other's health and long life in a bumper of wine. Perhaps the immortal author, in his fidelity to the gravity of those stirring times, could not reconcile the solemnity of thot parting with the cap that cheers. There is no doubt, however, that wine or its equivalent was as easily obtainable in these days as it is today.

There are many evidences in the explorations of the buried cities of Pompeii and Herenlaneum that alcoholic buverages played a leading part in the luxmy and debauchery of those ancient times. Signer Tamagne's atter failure in New York has evidently not had any effect on his European prospects, for his services are in demand everywhere in Europe, and he is still said to receive the largest salary paid to any foreign fenor. Now an artistic compilment has been paid to him, which is a more striking indication of the opinion held of his talents. He is to go to Pavis to sing in Vertil's "Otello," which is to be revived at the Ganad Opera House, and for the sake of Signor Tamagne the opera will be given in Italian.

A Drama That Was Played to a Wild, Hilberton Finish.

Slage realism has just alroat reached the limit in Williamsburg, K. Y. An unation dramatic company made up largely of young men and women who are wago carners has been giving a series of burlesques on Sunday evenings in a half that is a compromise between a dameshouse and a beer garden. The plays have been written by members of the rompany, and the slage setting required realism to suit the critical andiences.

On a recrut evening the action of the play took place in the barroom of a late. When the cartain went up, the speciators saw a well equipped har on the slage, with a lifelike barrender, who wore a big diamond stud. The actors same in through the family entranes, and with them came two men carrying a leg of the kind that frequently holds beer. It had been tapped, and as soon as it was in place the villain twited the other actors to have a drink.

A letter from La Paz, Bolivia, states that the Bolivian congress will declare war on Pero. There is great activity in military circles in Bolivia. The army is being placed on a war footing, and recrutting has began throughout the republic. The general staff is studying the topography of the Peruvian provinces of Arrupia, Pann and Magnegua, and the Bolivian press publishes documents to show that this territory is a part of Bolivia.

The first night of the season at the Hippodrome of Menagerie des Nations in that Inaghter loving and light heartsol city of cities—Paris.

Well might the proprietor, the genial Artelio Milandri, hum a tame as he contentedly counted the "takings," for those was not a seat to space. One simmering, sweltering mass of gay Parisians, patiently waiting the idel of every European capital, the one and the only, the inimitable Paolo.

Paole, better known to his friends and associates as Bob Sinclair, was a young Englishman—a well set up, fresh calored, early hairad Yorkellire Ind. Apprenticed as a tiny boy to the proprietor of a traveling circus, he had, willy-milly, gene through the mill, now horsanam, now nerobat, now clown, now ringamster, anything and everything. A day came at laugth whom, taking advantage of the "strong mun" proraw, Bob's nuscles, thews and showe suddenly launched him into famo, and up "Paole, the English Hercales." When Pholo stopped into the ring, the public outhusiasm knew to bounds. It would be only taking up space to describe the "strong mun" performance, which is now so familiar to everyhody.

Though Paole worked that night as eleverly as usual and without any npparent cifort to the eyes of the onlockers, yet within himself he felt weighed down by a strang foreboding that something unusual was about to happen, and he felt rently relieved when at last his performance was fluished, and he was at libury to return once more to his dressing room.

Sciplo was a bugo lion, purchased as a cub by Minadci for exhibition to the patrons of his menagerie. Owing to some carolessuess in the fastering of his cape door, the beast had manuged to escape, and, attracted by the small of the borses, was now making his way to the name, on the opposite side of which the stables were situated. Whispating a few besty directions into the ear of a clown who was filling in between the "turns" to stop the next artists from appearing and to close the stable entrances, Paulo made a bow and, holding up his hand for stience, corrace once more, orondoing low in the dust, his eye warily seeking some weak spot in the armor of this strange antagonist, whose lithe limbs and simons movements puzzled him, and who showed less signs of fear facing him here in open fight than the crowds of frail humanity who had mooked and jeered at him so often from the sufe side of his prison bars, but who shrank back affrighted when in his wrath he gave his newful battle rear.

This time, with catlike tread, he slowly advanced upon his adversary, striving, as though conscious of his power and strength, to drive him back and pou him helplessly and without chance of escape against the side of the ring, and then to size him at his leisure.

With a deep, hollow roar of anger Sciplo reared aloft on his hind legs, and, throwing all prudence to the winds and realizing that the momentous struggle had come at last, Puolo rushed misdly at him, man and heast closing in a torrible deuth grapple, the lion continuing eroot, as though wishful to wrustle on equal terms where the continuing eroot, as though wishful to wrustle on equal terms where he have biped.

But Sciple's mighty claws were busy, and the blood lust was on him too. Crimeon streaks through Paulo's tunic made it apparent to the fascinated beholders that this little wrestling hout was not all that it seemed, and many a timid heart, slekened by the sight of blood, edged furtively toward the nearest octifet.

A story of Du Maurier.

One day, while taking his favorite walk about the heath, Du Maurier saw a gathering of peple on the bonkers of the shallow pand which is a particular attraction to Hampstead. A thin centing of ice overed the water, excepting where a little dog had broken (hrough and was ineffectually struggling to get out again. The ice was, however, so weak that whenever this little creature drow its front paws up over the edge it broke under his weight and forced him to repeat this painful operation again and again, until it leaked as though the puor authout well become extansted in his efforts.

Du Maurier was in delicate health at the time, and, knowing that the water was newhere more than three feet deep called to the iditers in the crowd, "Hero's half a crown for the man who fetches that dog astern." The offer was not necepted, at least not soon enough to satisfy the mercurial artist. So, despite the doctor, into the point rashed Du Maurier, breaking bis way through the thin ice until he reached the drowning degrie, which he seized in his owns and brought ashore, amid the cheers of the lestunders. MUSEUM CRANKS.

Scople Who Want to Discuss of Alleged

People Who Want to Dispuse of Alleged Valuable Relies.

The anadour collector of enricotties generally has an exaggerated idea of the value of his treasures. No sooner does long at hold of something which he considers unique and interesting than he funcies that overy museum in the country will jump at the change of purchasing it from him. With this idea he is continually calling upon museum keepers and trying to persuade them into exhibiting his so called rarities.

The curator of a popular northern museum has been much verried in this way during the last year or so. Only the other week a which haired old man came to him and showed him a dagger which was said to be the weapon used by King John in stabling he boy Prince Arthur. The dagger was quite a modern affair and showed no signs of age, but the old man stack to his of scription stremments; to see the control of the principles of the control of the control of the principles of the principles of the control of the principles of the control of the principles of the control of the con chance, and it you won't have it take it take it elsewhere.

Needless to say, he had to take it elsewhere.

Another crank drove up to the museum gate one afterneon on a dray, to which was strapped a big, cumbersome writing table. The curator hastened out to meet him and was just in time to provent him bringing the piece of familiary boility into the ball.

On being asked for an explanation, the visitor said he had dedded to present the mascum with a priceless treasure in the shape of a writing table used by Sir Francis Bacco. He had been preserving it for a long time, he said, in order that he might write its history, which he had at last completed in a manuscript volume of $20 sheets. The curator, who is, of course, an expert, examined the desk and declared it to be worthless. It had apparently brea used in a scheckroom until it had got too risketly for service and was then disposed with. At any rate, it couldn't have been must than 50 years ald. This report was communicated to the visitor, who thereupen took to raving like a madman and became as violent that he and his treasure had to be marved along by the police.

LAFITTE THE PIRATE.

New Version of the Story Told by Gal-veston Oystermen.

New Version of the Story Told by Galveston island, Toxas, is very proud of Leilite, the pirate, Indeed, his fame, like that of Captain Kildl, grows greater with every year. Out on the island, a few miles from the city, is a grove knewn as Leittic's grove. A number of wind bent trees encircle a dancing povilion and are surcounded with a choice collection of oyster shells and tin cans. The alderly woman of the party, her old fashioned curls bobbing hysterically, hurried to a native who was placidly wrestling with a half dozen bushels of cysters.

"Say, mistor, who was this Leittle that they talk about?" she began, notebook in hand.

"Well, lady, he was a powerful big man. I don't know all the rights of the matter, but somehaw he had the habit of jerkin folks' money nway from em, and once in a while be brought a lot of it here to the island and buried it."

"Is there any buried here in the grove?"

"Of course I couldn't go right up to it, for that would have frightened it, and many be made it burt itself even worse. I had with me a sawed off brown stick that I carried for a walking stick, and I undertook to free the cathird with that. I thrust the stick through the bire's bush, all the other 40 birds looking on, and brought the end of it goi-thy against the cathird's wing and pushed the wing off the thorn. But to starting away the cathird got the wing off the thorn. But to starting away the cathird got the wing off the thorn. But to starting away the cathird got the wing from an another thorn. That was bad, and I stood off a minute deliberating about what to do next, the whole flook of birds still fluttering round and the imprisoned eathful now pretty nearly exhausted. It was a time to drop all exernony, and I shoply walked up to the bash and took the cathird off the horn with my hands.

"Just beyond the brier bushs following along mere or less mear, and hanging around there. Pretty seen the cathird got up and flow to a little troe nearly. It wasn't atrong, but it could ity and its wings wore all right. When it flow uping its thanks to une, and there I lot it."—New York Suu.

ORIENTAL EYES.

Their Much Landed Resuty Due to Fall Rodes of Living, An esteemed correspondent of The Woman's Arena writes, "May not the much landed largeness and luster of the oriental eye be due to false modes of living and to a low grade of civiliza-tion?"

In the first place these charms are never found among the working classes or among the tillers of the soil. They belong to the harem and to the harem coloig to the barean and to the harm-civilization.

I have examined the women's quar-ters in Constantinople and Cairo, in Adea and Bombay, in Calcutta and Ja-hore, and even in Hongkong and Cau-ton, and in pearly every instance the women's rooms were small and durk.
Where there were windows these were tore from the summer. Her forenead is contracted by a terrible frown, her eye-lids are screwed together and her eyes seem to be just the opposite of what they are described in poetry and romance.

It may be I am all wrong, but of all poetic humbings, I think that the gazellelike orb of the orient is the higgest. Hallavad In Either Mede.

"Why didn't they have that hoptizing out at the creek the other day?"
"It rained fusionaly while they were on their way out, and before they got half way there the man who was going baptized said he was not prein diced in favor of either mode, and b bolieved it wouldn't be necessary to go my further with the ceromony. cago Tribuno.
